"The sole amusement," says the writer, "consists in cating strawberries and ices, holding solemn conversations and watching royal personages feed. The entertainments are conducted with great sadness, and there is little difference between a garden party and a high class funeral. In France there would be games, laughter and general enjoyment."

CHARRYING AN UMBRELLA. - One of the most cheerful sights in the world (says the New York Commercial) is the graceful abandon with which the American and especially the New York woman, carries the umbrella which shades her fair face from the sun. That instrument of torture-for it proves to be one in many instances -is borne along at the same height and with the same unvarying steadiness in the surging crowd of Broadway as on the retired cross-streets up town. It does not matter to her how dense the crowd is, or how fast it goes hurrying by, the parasol is sternly immovable, and as the tips of WILL CONTINUE THE GENERAL above port, where they are prepared to furnish the justly celebrated Kawaihae Potatoes, and such other recruits as are the wires are on the level of the average man's eye, it is not strange if occasionally one penetrates that delicate organ. Nothing could be more different than the way in which a man and woman carry the umbrella. The former keeps it constantly moving in order to accommodate the crowd; the woman sweeps along, and if anybody's hat or eyes are in the way, it is not her fault.

It appears that her only resource was an annuity of MPORTERS AND WHOLESALE DEALabout $75, which her son John was legally bound ers in Fashionable Clothing, Hats, Caps, Boots and Shoes and every variety of Gentlemen's Superior Furnishing Goods to pay her. She was very ill, and at first the doctor had no hope of recovery. But after a few days attendance, he one morning found a marked improvement in her condition. "Well, granny," said he, "you are a great deal better this morning.' "Oh, be I?" said she, with great animation.

"And wull I get well, docther?" "Yes, I think you will," he replied. "But are you shure of it, docther?

"Yes, I am quite sure of it." "Oh, docther," said she, starting up and thrusting her hand under the bundle of rags which constituted her pillow, and drawing it out with energy, "if I had a bag of goold here under me pilly I'd give yees the hull of it for that same." Then laying herself back exhausted she added;

"I don't care anything about living, but I should like to disappoint John."

I don't want any quarrel, but you can see yourself that we can't get along. Now, you go to lawyer Dobbins an get him to draw up the papers. I can earn my own living and I shan't live with you another day." Blinkenberry argued, appealed and finally wept copiously. It was useless. The lady was determined upon a divorce, and the poor man hunted up Dobbins, and with tears in those eyes which have so often been reflected in bar-room mirrors, got that legal giant to draw up a complaint in which the said Brutus Blinkenberry aforesaid was charged with habitual drunkenness, cauelty, failure to provide, and a shameless disregard of the Ten Commandments. Quite broken-hearted, poor Blinkenberry dragged home with this document and dejectedly laid it in the lap of his wife. She read it and said with deadly calmness: "Brutus, you have given me a wound which can never heal. I've been a good wife to you, Blinkenberry, and I little thought you would expose me to the shame of a divorce court." "Good gad, Maria," cried the amazed man, "didn't you insist on my going to Dobbins. Ain't it your own pruppersition?" The lady gave a hysterical shriek, and to-day Mr. Blinkenberry has been going about with a quantity of court-plaster on his countenance and confiding to his friends the fact that "you can't know nothin'

about women, nohow.'
